AS-SALT

It is a town near Amman, Jordan. Its importance as a commercial center of the Ottoman Empire is reflected in its Ottoman architecture. The early 20th-century Abu Jaber mansion, now the As-Salt Historical Museum, has Italian frescoed ceilings. An Ottoman mosque dominates Hammam street with its food market. The Archaeological Museum focuses on finds from the Chalcolithic era (4500–3300 BC) up to the 16th century.

JERASH

O Gerasa has developed remarkably in the last century with the increasing importance of the tourism industry in the city. It is now the second most popular tourist attraction in Jordan.

UMM QAIS

Or Qays is a city in northern Jordan known primarily for its proximity to the ruins of ancient Gadara.

Ancient Gadara a high plateau amidst the stunning landscape of the northwest corner of Jordan, with stunning views across borders. When the weather is clear, the Sea of Galilee is clearly visible 12 km away.

Lake Tiberias

AJLUN

Ajloun is a city in the fertile highlands of northern Jordan. It is dominated by the ruins of Ajloun Castle, originally built in 1184 to defend against the Crusaders. Inside, exhibits at the Ajloun Archaeological Museum include ancient Neolithic artifacts. The Ajloun Castle Trail winds north to the ruined church of St. Elias, perched on top of a hill. The Path of the Prophet continues through orchards and oak trees to the Ajloun Forest Reserve.

KARAK CASTLE

Karak (or Kerak) Castle, a famous Crusader stronghold and later a Mamluk citadel, is an impressive example of military architecture.

The imposing castle that can be admired today was built by the Crusaders in the mid-12th century AD. It was the basis for the reckless and cruel campaigns of Lord Raynald of Châtillon. Karak withstood several Muslim sieges, but finally fell to Saladin in 1187.
